{mosgoogle right}As you may remember, back in September Mercedes debuted a never before seen SLK model, titled the SLK Special "Edition 10", in celebration of the sport roadster's ten year anniversary. Some highlights of the model included a matte-grey metallic paint finish, dark-grey high-sheen light-alloy wheels in a ten-spoke design, a black leather interior accented by silver-colored underlays and the wealth of technical features already found on the standard SLK lineup. On what is the exact ten year anniversary of the original SLK, Mercedes today has announced that beginning in January 2007, the SLK Special "Edition 10" will be making its way to European dealerships. Although only the first 350 customers will have the option of the same matte-grey metallic finish, a color Mercedes is calling "allanite grey Magno", the other options, including dark-grey "chrome shadow" light alloy wheels, dark-tinted rear lights and black leather interior, are all available.
