

Making Mercedes Production Safer And More Efficient: The New SafetyEYE Video System

Mercedes has announced today that in an ongoing effort to boost company safety and efficiency, they, in cooperation with Pitz, are developing a highly flexible video system to further improve production-facility working environments. The technology, formally known as SafetyEYE, will make it possible to replace numerous required safety systems that are both complex and costly. 'The new system will enable us to better protect workers from unintentional contact with production equipment,' says GÃ¼nter Walz, head of Production Planning at Mercedes Car Group. 'This system benefits employees and the company alike because it completely secures sensitive areas and thus ensures greater safety for workers.'
