

More GLK Speculation: Automobile Magazine Reports On Mercedes' Upcoming Small SUV

Although it's not rumored to be hitting dealerships until sometime in late 2008, the fine gentlemen over at Automobile magazine recently took a moment to speculate about the GLK, offering a small glimpse as to what they believe we can expect to see from Mercedes' upcoming small SUV. According to the publication, the GLK, which will be based on a 2008 C-Class 4MATIC chassis, is going to feature a number of changes over the standard's C's underpinnings, including new steering rack, bigger brakes and a modified independent suspension that permits more wheel travel. A handling package, which includes adaptive dampers, quicker steering and fatter anti-roll bars will also be available, while curb weight is said to fall somewhere between 3,400 and 3,700 pounds.
